Robinson Describes Negro Sit-In Strikes

Non-violent protests such as the current student strikes in the southern lunch counters offer the best chance of breaking the barriers of segregation, according to Marvin Robinson, former student body president of all Negro Southern University. Robinson discussed the Southern University picketing and other protests Tuesday evening in Dahmney Hall Lounge at the invitation of ASCIT and the YMCA.

He explained that what he and his group most desire is to be able to get their educations and to make their homes in the South, not to be forced to leave in order to get equal educational and employment opportunities.

WATER SCIENTISTS

According to Robinson, statements that the Negro is satisfied with the conditions in the South are erroneous and can probably be attributed to statements taken by white employers from Negro employees. Student groups, who have no mediate jobs at state, are re-volting the true sentiments he claims.

The moral question in the negro movement, Robinson believes, is whether a store owner has the right to permit a Negro to go to school, to work, to be a chaplain at one counter and then not permit him to step across the aisle and buy a 10 cent coke or a 15 cent hamburger.

FAILED

This summer Robinson is looking forward to spending 90 days in jail on a charge of disturbing the peace for his part in leading the Louisiana demonstrations against such practices.

He explained that according to state law the maximum penalty is 90 days in jail but for Negroes the local judge has taken upon himself to lengthen the time period and also to raise the necessary bail from $100 to $1000 and to require that the bail be in cash.

Similarly, Robinson was refused the right to vote in Louisiana because he was unable to explain the 2nd article of the state constitution to the satisfaction of the authorities.

BACK TO APRICA

Robinson has been expelled from the University of Michigan by the other student leaders after the entire student body of Southern University demonstrated under their direction in front of the Louisiana state capitol.

Governor Long, according to Robinson, answered their demand of 1 week to offer to contribute money out of his own pocket to send the group “back to Africa” if they were unhappy with conditions in Louisiana.

Barbara Sets Tech Concert For Thursday

Barbara Dyne, the folk singer who was featured at the Ash Grove last fall, and is known to millions through her records, nightclub appearances and TV shows, is being brought here on Thursday, May 23, by the Man and the Arts Commission of the YMCA.

She will give a concert in Culbertson, starting at 8:00 and lasting two hours. The first part of the concert will feature Barbara singing folk songs, accompanied by her guitar. After intermission she will launch into traditional blues, accompanied by a jazz band.

The public is invited and general admission is $1.50, while student rates are $0.75. Tickets can be obtained from Dave Men keys, Carl Rovainen, or any Man Club member.

Barbara’s throat roars has often made critics mention her name in the same breath as blues bards, Hellena Smith, and has the singing talent of “bending” a note and hitting her target as she slides a quarter tone above or below. Many of her fellow musicians sum her up in one word—she sings “soul.”

Band Concert Tonight

The Caltech Band will present its annual lunch concert tonight at 7:30 in the Olive Court between Ricketts and Flintridge. This concert will be the first appearance of the band in their recently acquired red blazers.

Conducted by Mr. John C. Deichman, director of the Los Angeles Rams’ Band, the band will offer a program of generic interest. Included in the program will be “A Santa Celia,” “Renaissance Suite,” “Pian Hoeddien,” by Richard Strauss, Highlights from “Gypsy”—an incidental musical to the autobiography of Gypsy Rose Lee, “American Folk Rhapsody,” by Clare Grundman; “Ode for Trumpet” with Jim Nearing as soloist; and a “folksong” by Frank Erickson.

Student Demonstrators Have Bad Day

By LEE MOLHO

“Police were spraying with water hoses . . . sweeping them, literally sweeping them down the street.”

“I saw about six policemen beat a student to the ground and the guy looked to me like he weighed 120 pounds . . .”

“I observed numerous policemen dragging young men and women down the wet steps from the Rotunda. The force used seemed much in excess of that necessary. They were not accomplishing their purposes, I did not see any of the demonstrators strike the police under the law.”

“Where was this taking place? Koreatown? Turkey? Not San Francisco.”

And the demonstration-turned-riot was not the result of Communist agitation, segregation, or Beatnik activity. The demonstrators were college students.

Seniors Enjoy Alumni Assoc. Programs

The Caltech Alumni Association is currently concerted a membership drive. Graduating seniors who choose to join will enjoy the following benefits: (a) subscription to "Engineering and Science," the Association's quarterly supplement—gives advertise, company affiliation and position of all alumni; (b) Social Events in the Southern California area: Fall wine and cheese meet, Winter Dinner Meeting, Dance, Annual Meeting and other activities for out-of-area groups; and (c) Annual Seminar Day—an all-day outing on campus with prominent speakers.

In addition to the specific benefits above, the Alumni Association provides a channel of communication between alumni and the Institute. It also, of course, assists in fund-raisning efforts.

Does are $5 per year or $100 life membership. In order to become North American, you must be a current student or graduate. If you are not, you can then, of course, receive a free invitation to the Annual Dinner Meeting at the time of the Young Alumnus on June 10th.

The Millikan Library, planned for the central campus since the 1919 plans, is now being called for early in 1962. Work is due to begin about the first of December this year. The five-level building will contain facilities for individual and group study as well as staff for most of the old library campus college.

About 115,000 volumes will be moved to the new building at about the same time. The old libraries may keep duplicate copies of well-used books and journals to be moved to the new library. At maximum, to be reached in about 25 years, the new campus Library will house 400,000 volumes.

Easy chairs will be scattered around the library, and the windows will be decks along the walls on each floor. In addition, eight group study rooms and blackboards and four individual study booths per floor are planned. The auditorium will be open until midnight each night, according to Dr. Roger Stanton, director of the Institute libraries. Dr. Stanton also stated that no plans have been made for any of the other areas to be vacated by the transfer.

The reflecting pools shown below will be the focal point in the library. In the architect's drawings, the water bowls, which were designed, are actually to be built. It is planned to have the water flowing over the rock, thus creating a virtual expanse, such as a fountain as it flows down.

The Beckman Auditorium, last building in the present 20-million-dollar development program, is now being called for, even though one such facility appears as an increase for commercial purposes.

A weekly Beckman, which would go to local high schools, is being considered by Edward Stone, principal architect for New Delhi, India's modern capital. A capacity of 1,200, 700 main floor and 500 balcony, is planned. The auditorium will be moved over a block north of San Pasqual. A south mail is to be completed for the present campus across the street from the Dabney-Gates lawn.

A curious tech reporter asked about the Physical Plant Department about the tremendous hole behind Engineering, across from the old dorm. Turns out a massive area for the campus is to be constructed there, and all of the existing buildings will be completely underground.

bravado. They, too, attempted to conceal the emotions genera­ted by my impending depar­ture. As I ran the gantlet for the last time, I was forced to admit that Dad had been right all along. Arriving at school 'round the horn had saved the family's face, and more. And I made a man of me in the process. I'd left Minnesota nothing­but a great, wide, open, and col­orless genius. Now, a mere three years, I stood boldly on the California soil, tanned, self­confident, my chronic sea-sick­ness well in hand. Caltech: A magic name in my ears—now often I had at Uncle Walt's knee, listening to tales of the daring great who had flocked to this small South­ern California school: Pauling, Millikan, Feynman, Desarteau, Eddlestein, Newton (in retrospect it appears that Uncle Walt, will be somewhat of a liar. "Here I am! I exalted as I climbed out of Walt's room would be Spalding basement.

Quite suddenly I was over­come by a mood of deepest apprehan­tion. How could I, thick­skinned, bored, and comely, be suspended as work for the na­tion's scientific youth? In paulean I ran screaming down the Olive Walk, shouting out the two­ti­able. And then, quite as sud­denly, the song of the beats song through my fevered brain: "Leaving a trade, Birdy, you not much good for heavy work..."

Slowly my composure returned and I began to reassume the composts of my knapsack (vented during the wild flight). I had learned an important lesson—gnome knots are poor for ac­tive knapsacks.

World Traveler Returns From Island Trip; Pierre Gets Cat

By Gary Younce

Three Houses complained recently that a fourth House had kidnapped their House cat. Here is the story of that kidnapping.

It was a beautiful day for vacationing on Catalina, Techmen stumbled around half awake getting ready when they all drove off to pick up dates. Larry Curtman unloaded an armload into Pierre Stumphard's trucking over an orange and white apple in the process. Thomas woke up enough to say, "Sure, why not?" "Want a vacation, Thomas?" The cat licked his whiskers.

Abso the boat, Thomas went exploring and eventually wound up tangled in the pulleys and fan belts of the refrigeration system, with his head pecked through the cabin. A crewman who was turning the system on, glared at the hapless cat, delayed long enough for Pierre to retrieve it.

Catalina's memory was like water, and "Thomas" is no excepion, being one of the very few who can't figure out how they rode over. He slept most of the trip.

Once on the island, he was again very much at home, and got a ride to the picnics on every car, along with the food. He was entomised to escape. The children fed him boys who found him, and $5 to the school, Pierre retired (with the cat) to a nearby bar, where Thomas walked up and down the bar, and Pierre chatted until plain time with six of the girls who came to enter a Lions convention. You might get him Harold Thomas down a few minutes while the food was unobtained. He obviously didn't see anything worth writing down. No one ever saw Thomas again that day.

Pierre and the owners of Thomas worked to get him back. Pierre wrote letter to the Police, Chamber of Commerce.

signal and they sang the "Star-Spangled Banner" on the stage the day after his life to tell you that story.

The police became more violent as the singing continued. In the chorus, humans named this: "The kids are sitting down again with their hands in their pockets. The police are taking them by their arms and dragging them bodily on the long staircase. . . . Five are being thrown down. They have their arms linked together. We're afraid they can't walk away separately; they must be taken down. The thought of the police seems to be to get them by the ankles and pull them over the fence down this stairway of some 50 steps...

Further observations were made by a young woman who commented, "I saw two police officers in the Rotunda at City Hall. The other was ... and beating up a young student who was completely unconscious. His head was under the shoulders and another showed one of his tibilus ..."

One of the police seems to be to get them by the ankles and pull them over the fence down this stairway of some 50 steps...

The subject of the contest papers was "The Best Generation." In preparation for the paper, two books, Jack Kerouac's "On the Road," and Lawrence Feingold's "A Cozy Island of My Own" were published.

Nine contestants entered.

Bright Lights . . . Coffee . . . and Shoes

by griffen

The English Department is undertaking to expose innocent freshmen to the wilds of Sherry's, a local novelty company. It is unfortunate that very few of the English professors know anything significant about Existentialism. An expose to Sartre or Camus (although he never professed to know much) is perhaps a little meaningless without a thorough background of their philosophies. There is, at Tech, one of the foremost authorities on Existentialism in the U.S. — Dr. Alfred Stern. Yet, only one teacher's courses have had the opportunity to hear this expert explain what they were reading. Some English professors are quite content to leave their students in the dark. Freshman English is quickly becoming one of the most high-powered humanities classes at Tech. If the English Department wants to teach a course of this kind, the individuals are, at least, required to know more about those who are trying to explain the classics.
Hess, Walsh To Meet In Scott Tournament

Dick Hess and John Walsh will clash this afternoon at 4 o'clock in the finals of the Scott Tennis Tournament, which is being held at Tournament Park. The tournament is held annually and is open to all undergraduates at the Institute.

SCICAC TOURNAMENT

The ASCICAC Conference Tournament was held at Tournament Park last Friday.

Dick Hess, Carl Morris, and Steve Hechler were entered for the Beavers, but were unable to advance far into the finals against Redlands and Oxy. Dick Hess clobbered his first opponent, 6-2, 61, but lost to Bobbit of Oxy, 62, 60. Steve Hechler also won his first match, this time by a score of 63, 62, but had to face Sandies of Redlands in the second game and lost, 63, 62. Unfortunately, Carl Morris had to face Sandies in the first round, and was eliminated.

Cal Tech's doubles team didn't fair much better. They were eliminated in the first round by Oxy, 63, 24, 7-5.

Although the tennis team did not do too well in the Scott Tournament, they did quite well in over-all league play. By smashing Pomona last week, 81, Cal Tech won undisputed third place in the SCIAC.

Two Barbers to Serve You

John Arnold looks as good as any at end, but the team lacks a good replacement for Herm Hartung. It looks like Captain Carl Gotteschall will have to replace unless some of the new men show a lot of improvement. The quarterback spot, traditionally weak on Caltech teams, looks as bad as ever this year unless Frank Marshall can improve his passing and ball handling, or unless Dave Barker, quarterback for last year's fresh team, can prove himself.

To sum it up, next year's team ought to be about the same as last year's. They lost a few men and gained a few, but there seems to have been little change in over-all quality. If anything, there should be a little more experience next year, and with luck, the team might even win a couple of games.
